
QUOTE WORTHY

Even if all three generations live in the same house, that does not mean they interact well. For example, children are so busy nowadays with piano lessons and tuition classes. They hardly have time with their parents, let alone grandparents.

— NUS assistant professor Thang Leng Leng, an anthropologist who has researched inter-generational ties in Singapore, speaking yesterday at an international workshop focusing on how to improve relations between the young and old
