Population and Development in Asia: Critical Issues for a Sustainable Future
20 – 22 March 2006, Phuket, Thailand

Panel on

Migration and Development: Impacts at Origin

Panel Organizer: Sara R. CURRAN
Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies, University of Washington, USA

Overview

In this session, the authors examine how migration influences development processes in origin communities and how origin communities influence migration. From analyses of the role remittances to discussions about health, education, and labour outcomes, all of these studies interrogate in more detail, theories about the relationship between migration and development with new data and methods.
